YOU women who read your Tribune every morning, searching out those newsy bits of special interest, who of you hasn't sometimes stopped in your reading to wonder about the woman behind the article?

Rose Young, in the September "Good Housekeeping," throws open wide the door; she shows you The New York Tribune's busy woman's staff and tells you about the women on other papers, and without dispelling anything but the falseness from the glamour that clings to a newspaper office, she points the way for the girl who wants to "break in" to newspaper work.

It's a mighty human document, and the light it throws on newspaper work for women is clear with sane reasoning and practical sugges-

The German Emperor would have been abashed could he have seen the drive on Sulzer's Harlem River Casino yesterday. Lemberg was shamed Men and women and children—forty thousand of them, it was estimated—lay siege to the building, stormed it by force of numbers, and devastated everything from the King's English down to tons of ice cream.

Every nationality was represented and yet nothing was done that was "deliberately unfriendly." Professors Flynn and Ladansky supplied the music, and yet there was a measure of harmony. A robust German danced with an almond-eyed Italian girl, an Austrian accepted beer from an Irishman and a Russian actually played cards with a subject of the Kaiser.

Seventy cars labelled "Tom Foley's Picnic" left Chatham Square yesterday afternoon. A cordon of policemen and civilians was stretched across the two pavements to permit a line of humanity to filter into the men and civilians was stretched across the two pavements to permit a line of humanity to filter into the waiting cars. Scores of the young generation were catanulted from the arms of Tom Foley's henchmen through the open windows and onto the floor. When the cers reached Second Avenue and 126th Street, the "kiddler" "I think I'm due for a raise rather than a cut in my salary," declared D'Alessandro. "I have to work evenings and Sundays. Why don't you go out and reduce the salaries of the big fellows, those who are getting $6,000 and $7,000 a year? Why pick the little fellows, living from hand to mouth? I've get a hig family. Why should I was the salaries of the salaries of the big fellows, the salaries of the big fellows, the salaries who should I was get a high family. Dr. Sears, according to Detective Sergeant Isabella Goodwin, offered to cure bald-vesters, failing avasight, by the desperate ride.

"Yeh, we want some o' that, mister," was the reply of one youngster.

The band stopped playing at 7:30. Somebody announced that the affair was ended in so far as the youngsters were concerned, and that the adults would arrive soon to do the "light fantastic." Grumbling at what they considered their hard fate, the very much begrimed, very much bespotted sought home and a soothing spot.
